

Voice Command & Coupons

In my local paper I read about Dunkin' Donuts™ having a standing special offer for members of the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP). You get a donut at no charge with each large coffee. The paper gave a web site address where there was a special QR-mId code with everything needed to create an order for voice or manual command.

I scanned the QR-mId from the web site and my device asked me to record a word, phrase or sound for the order. Feeling a little fanciful I said “Aaarpp”. Then typed the name for the order. I used ARPDO, a combination of AARP and donut. The order was created, I made a few changes in my preferences and set the authorization not to exceed (NTE) $4.00.

Next time I was in Dunkin' Donuts I spoke “Aaarpp”

... presented my QR-c and got exactly what I wanted, a large coffee with double cream, no sugar and a cream-filled, chocolate covered Bismark. Dunkin' got what it needed to account for my AARP credit so I just paid for the large coffee.

Ahhhhh, caffeine, sugar and a discount, what a way to start the day!
